Topic Learn how to protect your company when employees file workers' compensation claims. Workers' compensation statutes are written to heavily favor the prompt payment of benefits to injured workers by your insurance carrier. The insurance companies often settle these claims without considering the employer's interests, or even the impact of their quick settlements.

Speaker Benjamin Kennedy's practice concentrates on labor and employment law, including counseling employers on matters involving workplace discrimination and harassment, ADA compliance, wrongful discharge, wage and hour laws, employee handbooks, and policies and procedures. He also represents employers in employment litigation in state and federal courts and before administrative agencies.
